Earthquake Swarm, Brawley, Imperial County

On 12/31/16 at 0336 hours an earthquake swarm began near Brawley, south of the Salton Sea, which started with a M1.1 earthquake. The largest event recorded at 3.9 magnitude, with a 5.0 magnitude or larger expected. Imperial and San Diego Counties reported no injuries or damages associated with the event.

The Cal OES Earthquake Tsunami Program Duty Officer (EQTP DO) contacted Cal Tech in Pasadena and provided the following information:

- This sequence is far from the San Andreas Fault (SAF), more than 30 miles, and is not expected to affect the likelihood of a major SAF earthquake.
- The area of the swarm is known for geothermal activity and frequent earthquake swarms.
- The closest major fault is the Imperial Fault that extends into Mexico.
- Because this sequence is very active, it can be expected to continue for several days. However, the lack of abundance of smaller events ($M < 2$) accompanying the M3s is unusual.

Per John Parrish with the California Geological Survey and Chair of California Earthquake Prediction Evaluation Council (CEPEC).

- CEPEC continues to monitor the situation.
- This event is a geothermic field (magma body) and this type of earthquake activity is not uncommon, with similar swarm activity occurring approximately every 2-3 years.
- Based on the current magnitude of earthquake activity (mid 3 range and lower), there is no indication or expectation that a larger magnitude event will occur.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A weak, quick-hitting system will bring hit or miss showers through today, mainly across the valley. Lighter snow levels may reach as low as sea level in the North Coast.
- A cold, but fast moving storm system will bring significant winter weather impacts to Southern California by this evening.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

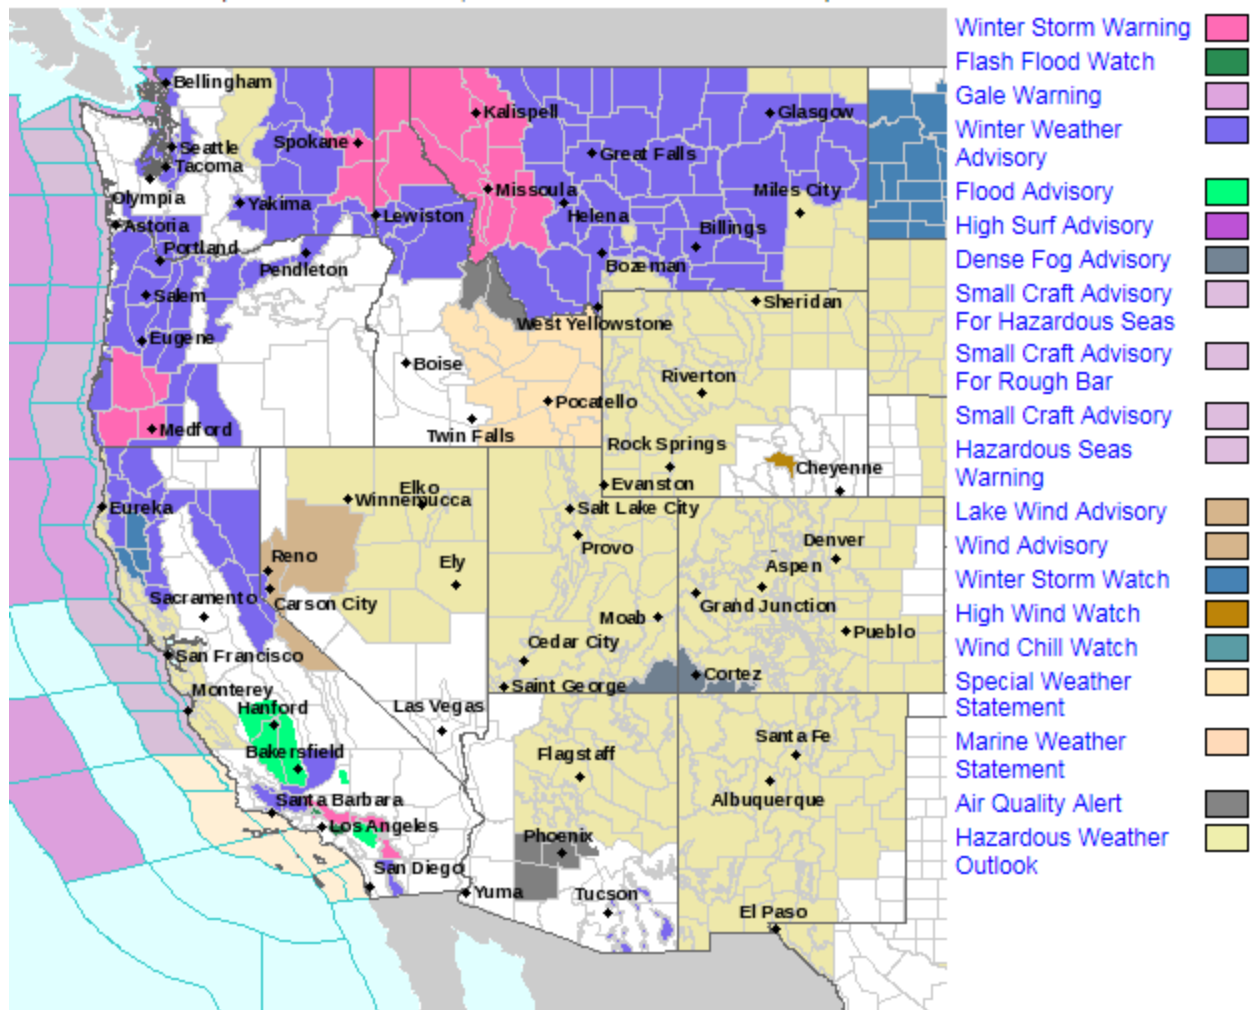

The first of two weather systems will drop in from the north today with the second system following on Monday and Tuesday. Much cooler temperatures are expected over the weekend and through early next week, along with scattered showers at times with low snow levels into Tuesday. A change in the forecast pattern could see widespread rains from the middle of the week through the end of the forecast period. However, there remains a great deal of forecast uncertainty for next week's forecast.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A colder storm system with mountain snow and showers will be expected in the region for New Year's Eve. Precipitation will come to an end by New Year's Day, with cool and breezy conditions expected. Cool weather will continue through much of next week, with more rain possible around mid week. Showers have tapered off across Los Angeles County early this morning with only a few showers now over Orange County. This is the lull between both systems. The upper low that moved over Southern California is now located near Flagstaff, while an intense upper low skirts the Northern California coast and will continue to do so as it moves south today. The upper low is expected to be just off Point Conception by this afternoon. The upper low will become slightly elongated and take on a slight negative tilt. That's when things get interesting later today for Los Angeles and Ventura Counties. There will be plenty of lingering low level moisture this morning just about everywhere. Some patchy dense fog has developed across the Central Coast and across the Salinas River Valley so expect mostly cloudy skies today. A few showers will develop across San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara Counties as the upper low continues to move south. The rain will become more significant and widespread across much of Los Angeles County and the inland areas of Ventura County.
